

Castle Dracula

As Johnathon came off the stagecoach, he collected his luggage from the roof of the bus. Two minutes went by and a tall, dark man stood in front of a rich-gold carriage. He pointed towards the carriage and Johnathon jumped in and the door of the transport slammed shut as loud as a hurricane. The journey took hours. All Johnathon could see out of the narrow windows was dark -green grass at the edge of a great forest. They went up mountains. They drove on winding paths. Suddenly, he heard a loud crackle of the driver savagely whipping the jet-black horses. When he looked back out of the window, he realised they were going passed a graveyard. He knew it was a graveyard because of the Christian crosses. Soon after, Johnathon saw the coal -black castle and was going over in his head what he would say to count Dracula. With a jolt, the carriage came to a stop. They had arrived. Johnathon got out of and walked up to the tall, brown door and rang the doorbell. A skinny figure stood in the doorway. He was dressed in a dark-black cloak. The old man had two sharp ghost-white teeth. Although he looked normal, his breath was so foul Johnathon would have rather been sprayed by a skunk. Johnathon asked, "Are you Dracula?" The man replied

"Yes I am." Then it hit him: he was a vampire...

You have started with a subordinate conjunction. What must your sentence have to include to split the main from the subordinate clause?

Response: comma

coal black – what could you include?

Response: hyphen